Tēnā tātou katoa

This month we welcome another new member of the team. Pauline Gulliver is our Research Fellow and will be working on issues papers, fact sheets and other research projects. Pauline's contact details are on the website.

Building collaborations to eliminate family violence written by Clare Murphy and Janet Fanslow is our very first Issues Paper. The Paper explores the current state of collaborative work on family violence in New Zealand. It identifies best practice principles and challenges relating to coordinated collaborative initiatives generally and as they relate to family violence specifically. Key messages include that coordinated and collaborative responses result in better outcomes for victims and perpetrators, enhanced processes in and between agencies, improved service delivery and provision and reduce violence.

The Clearinghouse will publish at least two Issues Papers each year.

Use the link below to download the Issues Paper or find it on the Resources page on the Clearinghouse website. With their funding uncertain after June 2012, there is also a link to more information about Family Violence Networks in New Zealand on the Resources page.

Please remember to let us know if you have published anything that we could include in the collection.
