Tēnā tātou katoa

Happy New Year. This first Pānui of the year is packed with links to reports, journal articles and other resources which have been added to the Clearinghouse library in the last month.

Family Violence Indicators report : Can national administrative data sets be used to measure trends in family violence in New Zealand?, the culmination of a project involving extensive consultation with a number of key government agencies has been published. This report was written by Dr Pauline Gulliver and Associate Professor Janet Fanslow from the Clearinghouse and published by SuPERU, a division of the Families Commission. The key conclusion is that: "This project has shown that although there are some useful administrative data sets in New Zealand, none could currently be considered a reliable source of data for monitoring trends in family violence in the community over time" (p. 78). This report will be available online shortly. The Clearinghouse has a limited number of printed copies. Please request a copy while stocks last.

In this Pānui, a number of the international journal articles focus on intimate partner violence (IPV) in the context of pregnancy. Some of these articles are published in the open access PLoS journals. Other topics include bullying, child custody, perpetrator risk assessment, recidivism and reintegration of child sex offenders and empowerment of IPV survivors.

Other news, views, and happenings in brief:

- New Zealand's second National Report to the United Nations \(UN\) Human Rights Council Universal Periodic Review prompts UN to voice concerns about violence against women in New Zealand
- Legislation to expand Extended Supervision Orders for sexual and violent offenders has been proposed by Corrections Minister Anne Tolley
- IPCA has found Police responses to a complaint about protection order breaches by a Northland woman killed in July 2012 were "poorly managed and grossly inadequate"
- Relevant research and media on the killing of the Livingstone children in Dunedin has been collated
- Applications for the third distribution of the Ministry of Social Development's \(MSD\) Capability Investment

Resource funding close on 28 February 2014

- The kuaka, bar-tailed godwit, known for its annual 11,000 km non-stop migration, has become the emblem of the Kuaka Project, a national Ministry of Social Development E Tu Whānau programme
- Shakti and MSD's It's Not OK Campaign team will launch Culture: No Excuse for Abuse!, a national resource booklet in Auckland on 14 February 2014

Tip of the month

Reading journal articles included in the Clearinghouse library

Original research is usually published first in academic peer-reviewed journals. Most journal publishers now make information about these articles, including the abstract, freely available online. However the full text of articles may only be available to subscribers or by making a one off payment.

In the Clearinghouse library record for a journal article, use the Access the abstract link - this is usually the permanent DOI link - to find the article citation and abstract online. If your organisation has a subscription, you may be able to download the full article.

Some articles are offered as free downloads while they are at the preprint stage - look for epub or online first.

Some authors pay to have their articles open access, and some journals such as PLoS publish all their articles as open access. If we are sure you will have free access this is indicated in the article link.

If you cannot find full text online, contact your local public library and ask about their inter-library loan service. If you work for a government agency or DHB, please contact your library for help. If you are affiliated with a tertiary institution, that organisation's library will be able to assist you to obtain articles.

The Clearinghouse is working to make as many items as possible freely available, within the constraints of copyright and licensing agreements.
